When we moved into Lamanver Farm our solicitor offered us a bundle of dusty obsolete legal documents. They date back to 1732. This of course predates the construction of Argal Reservoir which I always understood to have been built in 1939. Having read some of these old documents –often then prompted to the vast resources on the internet- it is clear that 1939 tells only part of the story.

PART 1 FALMOUTH WATER ACT 1930 and THE ANTER BROOK

This Act of Parliament is fundamentally about the Argal Reservoir. I think the annotation top Left refers to King George V. Unedited extracts in the right hand margin in the sequence in which they appear.

The Parish tithe maps of 1840 show a meandering faint blue line with arrow heads annotating direction of flow . This must be the Anter Brook although it is not formally named on the map. It rises in a field alongside 'ANTERTAVIS below Longdowns before dropping below Goodagrane, through Trevone, through Helland Mill then down to Argal Mill which is shown located beyond the present dam where the brook feeds College Reservoir.

In the next edition time moves on ,War in Europe and the building of the dam commences.

Save the Children

The 'Pop up Shop' at Shalom raised almost £300 this year with the sale of cards and craft items. Thank you to everyone for your support in buying goods and for generous donations.

As always much appreciated. Gilly Bennett
